Press release

The road to research-rich learning: EWC offers free access to leading research and bursaries.

The Education Workforce Council is giving free access to leading research to its 75,000 registrants.

Registered school and FE teachers, learning assistants, youth workers and work based learning practitioners in Wales can now search thousands of academic journals, e-books and abstracts using the EBSCO online service.

This facility will form part of the EWC and Welsh Government's national e-portfolio system, the Professional Learning Passport. The EWC will provide support to help practitioners to use and get the best out of EBSCO.

Chief Executive of EWC, Hayden Llewellyn said, "We are delighted to offer this service. Finding time to seek out the latest research is never easy but we hope this will play a small part in helping practitioners to develop their own learning and improve outcomes for their learners."

The EWC will also launch a small research bursary pilot scheme in the new term, which will be available for both individual and group projects. Contact us for more information on 029 2046 0099 or e-mail research@ewc.wales.
